

Background Information KOF Economic Barometer

September 2019 Revision from Vintage 2018 to Vintage 2019

The KOF Economic Barometer is a composite leading indicator for the Swiss economy. KOF updates the set of underlying indicators and their weights annually after the release of previous year's annual Gross Domestic Product (GDP) data by the Swiss Federal Statistical Office (FSO). The 2019 revision took place in September. Our reference series is the smoothed continuous growth rate of Swiss GDP distributed across the three months of a quarter, based on the official quarterly real GDP statistics, adjusted for the effects of major international sporting events, released by the Swiss State Secretariat for Economic Affairs (SECO) in early September 2019. SECO in turn takes the release of the previous year's annual GDP data published by the FSO into account. The 2018 vintage of the KOF Barometer (published until August 2019) comprised 345 indicator variables. The current 2019 vintage, which is now replacing the 2018 vintage, consists of 376 indicator variables, selected from a pool of more than 600 candidate variables. Compared to the previous vintage, 75 indicators are new and 45 dropped out of the set of selected indicators (cf. table in the appendix).

The following graph shows the current and previous vintages. The revision affects the whole time span as covered by the Barometer. This is due to the changes in the reference series, the 12 months forward shift of the in-sample period used for the selection of the indicators, the resulting indicator selection, the updating of the seasonal factors as well as the new indicator weights.

The change from the 2018 to the 2019 vintage resulted in a mean absolute revision of 3.39 index points (calculated from January 2009, the start of the in-sample period used for indicator selection, to December 2017, the last common in-sample data point for both vintages). Given that the average of the Barometer equals 100 by construction, this is a reasonably large revision. The correlation between the two is 0.87, indicating a strong coherence between the two vintages.
